

Amorphous and Glassy Materials: Short Range Molecular Order Compared with Crystalline Order

*Dr. Simon Bates
Research Fellow
Aptuit Consulting, Inc.*

X-ray powder diffraction provides a useful tool for characterizing the level of order present in amorphous/glassy materials. When comparing the molecular packing motif of the short range glassy order with the molecular packing within the unit cell of crystalline polymorphs of the same molecular entity, some interesting relationships are revealed.